

Sandy Hilton Artist Bio

“The practice of art isn't to make a living. It's to make your soul grow.” Kurt Vonnegut

I have always been intrigued with the feel of the earth between my fingers. I love using raw clay from the earth as the main media I work with. I love the process of forming wet clay and then letting heat and glass perform the final results.

My journey with clay started after being inspired by a National Geographic film I saw in grade school of a person making pottery on a wheel. I was hooked and eventually took a ceramics class in high school and went on to pursue a degree in art from Cal State Northridge. I began teaching pottery in 1978 and have enjoyed sharing the joy of pottery-making with hundreds of students since then.

I currently teach for Folsom Parks and Recreation at the Art Center at 48 Natoma, <https://www.folsom.ca.us/parks/default.asp>. I retired as the Community and Cultural Services Manager for the City of Folsom in 2013 and am enjoying the freedom to allow the clay to flow through my fingers on a regular basis.
