

Jeannie Courter

Art has always played an important part in Jeannie's life. She grew up in a small town where she spent time riding her horse, sewing, playing the piano, and drawing. Both her dad and her grandmother were extremely influential in her love for art.

She watched Dad draw and later watched him use his retirement to oil paint. Both her Mom and Dad made sure the family spent summers camping, fishing, and visiting national parks. These experiences influenced her desire to paint outdoor scenes. After spending thirty years teaching and raising three children Jeannie retired and began painting. She has been oil painting for the last three years.

What she enjoys most about painting is telling a story such as: a boy returning home from fishing, a child exploring a pond, a forgotten barn that has weathered through the years, or a path leading to a forgotten place. It is her intent to guide viewers to a happy place and hopefully give them the opportunity to reconnect to a past experience and inspire others to explore their own creative interests.
